As to be expected the large multination companies had a strong presence. BASF was testing its potential new insecticide 'tablet style' delivery system – as seen at PestTech the week before. Bayer was doing a roaring trade and the European team from Bell was present, including the company's new territory manager for France – Arnaud Del Valle. Whilst the now merged business of DuPont with Syngenta was present on its distributor's stand.

We are becoming one industry

Appropriately, the last word goes to Marc Esculier, currently president of the French trade association – CS3D. Reflecting the views of many, Marc said: "Pest control, especially in Europe, is increasingly becoming one big family. We all face the same problems and the same issues. The manufacturers are common to most markets, as are the suppliers. All these events are coming together – and together we are stronger. Our thanks should go to all those involved with the trade associations around Europe and to CEPA. We are becoming one industry."
